Interpretation of the Results

- Two methods are employed for ABO grouping-cell grouping (forward grouping) and serum grouping (backward or reverse grouping).
- In cell grouping, red cells are tested for the presence of A and B antigens employing known specific anti-A and anti-B sera.
- In serum grouping, serum is tested for the presence of anti-A and anti-B antibodies by employing known group A and group B reagent red cells.
- Both cell and serum grouping are done as each test acts as a check on the other thus reducing the risk of error in grouping.
